

Moodle is famous for its "Death Scroll" — content that seems to go on forever as you move down the page. The example at right gives you an idea of how far a student would have to scroll to find materials for week 10 in this class.

Fortunately, it is possible to reduce scrolling without seriously revamping your course.

Begin by clicking on the course Admin gear in the upper right corner of your course main page, then choose Edit settings.

In the Course format option area, use the Course layout pull-down menu to select Show one section per page.

Scroll down and Save changes.

(If you had editing turned on when you changed this setting, don't panic if your course doesn't look any different! See note at end.)

A screenshot of a Moodle course page titled 'Project Management'. The page features a colorful geometric logo. Below the title, there are three activity icons: 'Announcements', 'Attendance', and 'Term Project'. A section titled 'Ongoing Activities & Resources' contains a description of course resources, a link to 'Syllabus & Course Calendar', and a 'COURSE INFO' section with a 'Peer Review Process' link. Another section titled 'Presession Materials' includes a photo of a dog, a description of a temperament survey, and two links: '0.1 Let's Get Acquainted!' and '0.2 Temperament Survey'. Checkmarks are visible next to the last two links.

In the course display view (when editing is turned off), the example course looks like this:

And this is what a section looks like when you open it....

- A blue callout points to the top right corner, stating: "Section summary appears here."
- A black callout points to a list of resources on the right, stating: "Info added in label."
- A red callout points to a link labeled "0.1 Let's Get Acquainted!", stating: "Link to prior section."
- A green callout points to a "Jump to..." dropdown menu, stating: "Jump to... main page or any section."
- A red callout points to a link labeled "Week One: 9/30-10/6 ►", stating: "Link to next section."

The "Jump to..." dropdown menu is open, showing the following options:

- Jump to...

Helpful Things to Know

- When editing is turned on in your course, all sections will still be displayed! That doesn't mean that your new setting doesn't work—turn editing off or switch to Student role to see what it looks like to students. Clicking on a section title will display one section in edit view.
- Text and images that are entered in the section summary area will appear on the course main page, so you'll want to be sure to limit the material you include in the summary. Copy any leftover content into a "label" resource to get the greatest bang for your scroll-reducing buck.
