Project duties and tasks:

I have written a novel and I am looking for a student who might want to take on the project, perhaps for a thesis, of getting the novel published (either self- or via an agent/publisher), and marketed (including creating a website/Facebook page/etc.), with the end goal to sell the rights to a movie-making entity. In essence, I have done the work of writing the story, now I need help in getting it 'out there.'

Query/Synopsis of the book: "A BAKLAVA LIFE is a literary historical novel, complete at 90,000 wds, which weaves a compelling, suspenseful odyssey-like tale of iconic youth with a unique twist. It melds 3D reality with the equally real, yet invisible realm of the spiritual and the metaphysical. Kindness is a prevailing theme, something the world is currently seeking. This book should be stamped Time Sensitive – Read Immediately, as it constantly reaches out to the reader to open one's heart and mind. Now."

This is a project that could springboard a career for the ambitious person. If the outcome of this venture is the successful one I envision, the career opportunities this could foster are immeasurable.

Preferred skills& technical knowledge:

I want to work with a student who is knowledgeable of how the internet/viral world works; truly likes his chosen field of study and sees the endless possibilities available; and is eager to embrace a challenge. The student must be able to set and meet deadlines.

Additional information:

- Hours to be determined by workload (this is not a 9-5 company)
- Pay rate is negotiable - I expect good work in exchange for good pay. Payment could be upfront, or negotiated based on success of the venture.

Ideally, I want to match up with a person who has drive, vision and can see beyond this project into the future. My dream is to see this book as a movie, so I'm looking for someone who wants to achieve big and have fun doing it. As my father used to say, "Try...and if it's an epic fail, at least you'll have a great story to tell."
